Dear SSCI Member:

I am proud to announce that, despite the challenges facing academic medicine and its supportive institutions and the continuing recovery efforts in our region caused by Hurricane Katrina, the SSCI continues to thrive as a regional academic society. The major reasons that we continue to be successful are:

- 1) We maintain a solid financial base that assures our resilience. That strong financial foundation comes from the support of members like you and the success of the American Journal of the Medical Sciences.
- 2) We continue to be associated with an exciting annual meeting. The 2007 meeting was a huge success with almost 400 abstracts and approximately 500 attendees. The enthusiasm of the attendees in being back in New Orleans was truly overwhelming.
- 3) We have made a concerted effort to focus the mission of our society and the purpose of our annual meeting on the academic development and mentoring of young trainees and faculty, a goal all members can embrace. Many trainees lack the financial support and/or depth of research experience to participate in large national meetings. Our meeting addresses those issues, providing a venue for all trainees to present their work and participate in the exchange of ideas. If you have not been to the Southern Regional Meeting in the past few years, I encourage you be part of this personally rewarding experience.
- 4) I believe that the SSCI has been strengthened by the development of a strategic plan, reorganization of its council, updating of its bylaws, and maintaining an informative, easily accessible website. In all, we have the finances, organization, and mission to keep us vibrant for the foreseeable future.

In the spirit of our mission to support the academic development of young trainees, I encourage all SSCI members to be proactive in helping promising resident and fellow trainees get their start in academic medicine. One way to do this, while simultaneously satisfying ACGME curricular requirements for scholarly activity by trainees, is to encourage your residents and fellows to submit an abstract of their work to the 2008 Southern Regional Meeting. As a member in good standing of the SSCI, residents and fellows doing research with you are eligible to compete for travel awards to attend the meeting. Many Chairs of Medicine and other academic leaders attend the meeting, which further enhances the experience for trainees.

In addition to encouraging and supporting your trainees to submit their work at the Southern Regional Meeting, members can support the SSCI and its mission by:

1. Attending and participating in the annual meeting
2. Nominating faculty members (M.D., Ph.D. and Pharm.D.) at your institution for membership
3. Submitting manuscripts and case reports to the American Journal of the Medical Sciences
4. Staying up-to-date on membership dues
5. Raising funds for trainee travel support

Information on how to participate in each of the above (and contribute in other ways) can be found on our website, www.ssciweb.org.

The SSCI has a worthy and important mission. On behalf of the Council, I urge all members to be active in our organization as we strive to ensure the future of academic medicine.

Sincerely,
